

INDIAN TRIBES OF NORTH AMERICA (1952) Bureau of American Ethnology, Bulletin 145

- Algonquian tribe or body of Indians belonging to the Abnaki group, formerly living on Missisquoi r. in N. Vermont." (p. 872) He explains that "[t]hey had a large village at the mouth of Missisquoi r. in Franklin co., on L. Champlain, but abandoned it about 1730 on account of the ravages of an epidemic, and removed to St. Francis, Quebec." (p. 872).
- 1914 Warren K. Moorehead
The American Indian in the United States; Period 1850-1914: The Present Condition of the American Indian; His Political History and Other Topics; A Plea for Justice
Moorehead's report includes a chapter on "The Indians Today," in which he identifies groups of Indians continuing to live in tribal relations, such as the Penobscot and Passamaquoddy in Maine. However, he sees no significant group in Vermont. He notes that although the census of 1910 lists Indians in the eastern states, most of them "are white people in every way, save color." (p.33, 35) To discover the next body of Indians of more than 300 or 400, he looks to New York State and south to North Carolina.
- 1934 Gladys Tantaquidgeon
The New England Indians
Tantaquidgeon was an anthropologist who studied under Frank Speck; she was an Indian herself as well. Her study for the Commissioner of Indian Affairs describes the current state of the Indians in New England. She writes of Abenaki in Maine, but does not find any in Vermont.
- 1948 William Harlen Gilbert, Jr.
Surviving Indian Groups of the Eastern United States
Gilbert's study was prepared for the "purpose of indicating the extent to which Indian blood still remains noticeable in our eastern States population." His paper was prepared as a report for the Smithsonian Institution. He addresses each of the Eastern States individually. For Vermont, he writes: "No surviving social groups of Indians are recorded for Vermont, although the census records a few scattered individuals." (p. 409).
